Parties are not Madeline's thing.

Being social isn't her thing. She's a five-foot eight-inch industrial -strength loser. She's invisible. She's no one. She could drop dead in class and no one would notice.

So why does she accept an invitation — from someone she barely knows — to the party of the year?

Certainly not because Mark Alister is going. Popular, attractive, universally desired Mark Alister. A boy like that would never even look at a trainwreck like her!

But . . . he does! He talks to her! They fall in love! And they live happily ever after. The end.

Yeah — not a chance. Maybe if she lived in a Disney movie. In reality, Madeline has walked straight into a trap — one which no amount of wishing on stars can save her from. Mark is going to make her face everything she's been hiding from for the past seven years. And the truth about Madeline Parker could either fix her, and make her worthy of being loved . . . or it could kill her.

Or both.
