There's a reason that we fear those bumps in the night, why we're scared of the dark, and why we write off those shadows that we saw out of the corner of our eye.

For anthropology professor Samantha Kapp researching the supernatural is a hobby bordering on an obsession. That is until an Indiana Jones wannabe, Alex Link, shows up in her classroom. He convinces her to lead an archaeological dig in a remote location deep within the Brazilian jungle.

When a man referring to himself as "The Dragon" confronts her in an airport bathroom, Sam realizes this isn't just a normal dig. The Dragon explains that she's supposed to find part of an ancient, lost map, which leads to a book more dangerous than anyone can fathom.

The book is a prison and captured within it are all things supernatural. Guarding this piece of the map is a race of beings so ancient and evil that their very existence has been wiped from humanity's mind. It's been regulated to myth and legend.

Soon Sam is racing against time, because someone else is after the map and the book. They mean to open it, and unleash every monster and supernatural phenomena imprisoned within. Will Sam succeed? Will the human race be wiped out once and for all?

This is a Novella - apprx. 16,000 words or 74 pages.
