Jimmy Campbell has owned his own bar for the past twenty years. While his past is troubled, his present and future make life worth living. He has good friends, more than enough money, and he volunteers-along with his Yorkie, Bozo, and his Maine coon cat, Miss Alicia-at the local hospital every Friday. He couldn't ask for more. That is, until he meets Derek "Dizzy" Roberts.

Derek is a musician who tours the country with his band. He's an ex-cop, was married once, and has the bitter ex-wife and two spoiled children to prove it. He's finally living his dream, and that includes bedding all the groupies who think he's every bit as good as his music. He doesn't worry much about the future, until he meets Jimmy.

The two men begin a long-distance romance, sneaking weekends here and there, until a tragedy forces them to realize they might lose the only thing they both want-a future together. Now, they're asking for everything heaven will allow.
