This is not a separate book; it is simply a continuation of the First Book. The plan of the whole and the general directions for teaching the same will be found in the Preface and Suggestions to Teachers contained in the First Book. Therefore that matter should be carefully read before taking up this book. All lessons which have received no special directions for teaching require none. The new sounds which such lessons are designed to teach have no rules. They must simply be learned by repetition. Ample opportunity for this is furnished in these lessons and in numerous reviews. Attention is now called to the effect the letter r has upon any vowel which precedes-it. This effect of r should be strongly impressed upon the child's attention. Write a very large R upon the blackboard, and say, Here is a letter we must always remember when we are trying to sound a word. The following story has been found a great help: Have the children sound r, and call attention to the rough, growling sound it makes.
